Culture Note

Garage sales, or yard sales, are common in the United States. They are usually held on the weekend. People have garage sales for various reasons: they are going to move and do not want to take everything with them; they do not use the items anymore; they need some money; or they simply want fewer things in their home. People usually post signs around the neighborhood saying when and where the garage sale will be.

Teaching Tip

While many teachers are hesitant to use choral repetition, it is actually a valuable technique. In addition to giving students a good model to follow, choral repetition of words or phrases can also bring the class together, focus students' attention, and take the pressure off individuals to speak.

Additional Activity

In pairs, have students go over the answers to the tag questions in the Quick Check Comprehension exercise. Have student A ask the question (Andrew doesn't have a brother, does he?) and student B give the answer (Yes, he does.). Then have student A ask: How do you know? Student B has to find the information that proves the answer. (Because Steve says Andrew is his twin brother.) Walk around and monitor, encouraging students to use rising intonation when they ask the questions.

facts

- In order to be considered an “antique,” a piece of furniture should be over 100 years old.
- Since cars usually don’t last that long, in order to be considered an antique, a car has to be only 25 years old.
- Some people love to hunt through wares at garage sales looking for valuable antiques. There is a saying to describe this hobby: “One man’s trash is another man’s treasure!”
